CONFERENCE OBJECTIVES

The conference aims to open a space for examining the role of adult education in creating the European Education Area (EEA), particularly in the countries of Southeast Europe, some of which are EU members while others have varying statuses of accession. Adult education and lifelong learning are embedded in several recent European Union documents and initiatives aimed at building more resilient, sustainable, and inclusive education systems across Europe. They are part of the vision of the European Education Area, aligned with the European Pillar of Social Rights, which is founded on education, training, and lifelong learning. The European Year of Skills is based on the belief that appropriate lifelong learning and education opportunities can address the skills gap needed for the development of modern technologies, especially for the implementation of digital and green transformation. The new European Skills Agenda is focused on increasing the participation of various groups of adults in learning, with a special emphasis on the unemployed or those without the necessary level of professional or digital skills.

Adult education is a highly relevant topic at high-level international gatherings (e.g., CONFINTEA organized by UNESCO) and appears as a topic within the UN's Sustainable Development Goals (SDG), specifically Goal 4. The latest Global Report on Adult Learning and Education (GRALE 5) highlighted the need to align adult education with socio-economic and technological development and to better anticipate the future needs of different groups of adults. These topics gain particular importance in the context of demographic changes, digital transformation, the spread of artificial intelligence, climate change, and the European Green Deal. Without serious engagement with these issues, which includes the collaboration of researchers, policymakers, and practitioners in the field, their significance cannot be adequately addressed.

The New European Agenda for Adult Learning 2021-2030 (NEAAL 2030) highlights the need for in-depth analyses and research at the international, European, and national levels using various methodological approaches and involving different groups of adults. The Agenda also calls for the enhancement of knowledge about adult learning based on relevant research. Locally, the Strategic Platform for the Development of Adult Education in Bosnia and Herzegovina in the context of lifelong learning (2014-2020) has expired, and a new document should be prepared. This process requires careful analysis and clearly articulated priorities based on the results of empirical research.

The question arises as to how Southeast European countries, which belong to the same intellectual and academic tradition of Andragogy and share part of a common history but significantly differ in addressing contemporary issues of adult education, are working towards achieving the goals of the European Education Area in the domain of adult education and lifelong learning. In this context, it is necessary to consider several broader themes, starting from the status of andragogy as a scientific discipline, research, and study programs, to laws and practical solutions created by adult education organizers. The need to align domestic legislation with trends in the European and global context further emphasizes the importance of organizing such an international conference.

The conference will be an opportunity for meetings between the academic community and researchers, as well as practitioners and policymakers. This seeks to contribute to strengthening practices and policies based on scientific research.

The conference is divided into four sessions:

- I. Andragogy study programs and the education of andragogical professionals
- II. Adult education in times of multiple crises
- III. Legal frameworks and models of financing adult education
- IV. Experiences from the practice of adult education
